Preface

The last general Catalogue of the Alpha of Rhode Island, A Century of Scholars, appeared in 1932. As was appropriate at that time, it contained a report of the Centennial Exercises of 1930, including the distinguished historical address by Mr. Hughes and an Appendix of documents bearing on the founding of the Chapter. The volume was reprinted in 1942, unchanged except for the correction of a few errors and the listing of members added during the decade.

The present volume omits the Appendix and retains from the Anniversary Exercises only the historical address. But in one respect it has its own historical significance, superseding all previous editions. In the 1914 Catalogue, the last preceding A Century of Scholars, the date of his election was for the first time attached to the name of each Alumni or Honorary member; necessarily, therefore, "The membership lists contained in this catalogue have been carefully compared with those in previous catalogues, and with the minutes of the Society . . ." The 1955 editor has retraced the paths followed, as their marginal notations show, by Professors Munro, Bronson, Randall, and Dealey, with somewhat surprising results. The spelling of several names has been corrected and greater consistency in the recording of degrees, positions of honor, and residences has been sought. Four names omitted by error from all previous editions have been recovered. Most important, a close study of the minutes, the book of signatures, and the early Catalogues (1839, 1843, 1850) revealed an inconsistency in the treatment of persons elected to Alumni or Honorary Membership who for one reason or another did not present themselves for initiation. Sometimes such persons were included in the Catalogue, sometimes barred. The present editor has been authorized to pursue the more liberal policy, since during most of our history the initiation of such members has not been required. Consequently twenty-seven persons of this group have been added to our roll of members, making thirty-one new names in all. For ease of identification, a symbol is attached to each name.

The editor has had the invaluable assistance of Miss Helen L. Urquhart on the lists for the last fifty years and on the Index. For the earlier portions he is alone responsible.

THE HISTORY OF THE CHAPTER

The History of the Chapter

Charles Evans Hughes

EDWARD EVERETT HALE described the Phi Beta Kappa Society as "one of the queerest things in America." The phrase was intended to be striking, rather than irreverent, and to emphasize the features of a unique development. At the outset there was no thought of a society without social intercourse, of a fraternity without fraternizing, of a union based on achievement rather than on intimate personal association. The young men of the College of William and Mary who founded Phi Beta Kappa on December 5, 1776, contemplated a true, albeit refined, fellowship of congenial souls. On its social side, the Society had the qualities which have ever since been the characteristics of most college fraternities, and its aims were fostered in an atmosphere of companionship which did not disdain conviviality. It was organized with "a happy spirit and resolution" as a secret society, with ritual and iron-clad oath of fidelity, with grip, motto, and the badge bearing the symbols which were later retained on the familiar golden key.

The Society did not lack, however, the distinguishing features which prefigured its peculiar relation to American scholarship. There was the unusual distinction of its founders, among whom we count not only the original members but those who were added within the four years of brilliant activity which was brought to an end when, in January, 1781, in the face of British forces led by Benedict Arnold, the College of William and Mary was compelled to close its doors. The great majority of these fifty members were chosen from the body of undergraduates, but there were also a few who were either graduate students or alumni and honorary members. The undergraduates were very young. Of the original group, not one was over twenty, and of the entire fifty it is understood that only three had reached the age of twenty-five. But they were young men of an unusual promise, which was abundantly fulfilled. The first president, John Heath, served with distinction as Commonwealth's attorney and representative in Congress, and was a leading member of the Bar. His successor, William Short, was secretary of legation in France, when Jefferson was minister, and later was minister resident at The Hague and commissioner plenipotentiary at Madrid. It is recorded that fifteen of the fifty were in the Continental army; that seventeen served in the state legislatures, most of them for several terms; that eight were members of the convention which ratified the Federal Constitution; that five served in the national House of Representatives, and two in the national Senate. Outstanding on this roster of eminent names are Archibald Stuart, a member of seven electoral colleges; Spencer Roane, son-in-law of Patrick Henry; Bushrod Washington, George Washington's favorite nephew, who became Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States; and John Marshall. When Marshall was elected in May, 1780, his fame as a "young soldier, fresh from the war, was very bright in Virginia." He was hailed as the "gallant captain who had fought under the great Washington and who had proved himself a hero at Brandywine and Germantown, at Valley Forge and Monmouth." He was immediately recommended for election "as a gentleman who would make a worthy member of this Society." He was probably, we are told, "the oldest of all the students" but "by far, the most interesting and notable." He had come to William and Mary to attend the law lectures of George Wythe and thus to begin the career destined to become the most illustrious in our legal annals.

The aims of the Society were worthy of such a group of young men, earnest, talented, and aspiring. It was distinctly a literary society. The original three stars on its badge symbolized Fraternity, Morality, Literature. The hand pointing to the stars was the symbol of aspiration. It was to be a fellowship of generous minds enriched by friendly interchanges of the utmost freedom. The sentiments of the founders found expression in the ritual of initiation: "Brother," said the President, ". . . this Society . . . at first . . . was confined to a small number of very worthy students. They planted the scion, from which has grown this tree that now buds forth before your eyes, with the blossoms of harmony and concord. It was ingrafted on the stock of friendship, in the soil of virtue, enriched by literature. To cherish and keep it alive hath been the constant care of those members who have succeeded. To which end they have ever kept in view the design of its worthy founders, who adopted this friendly communion as a recreation to the philosophic mind, satiate with investigating the various springs of human nature and human actions. Now then you may for a while disengage yourselves from Scholastic Laws and communicate without reserve whatever reflections you have made upon various objects, remembering that everything transacted within this room is transacted sub rosa, and detested is he that discloses it. Here, too, you are to indulge in matters of speculation, that freedom of inquiry which ever dispels the clouds of falsehood by the radiant sunshine of truth. Here you are to look for a sincere Friend, and here you are to become the brother of inalienable brothers."

Nothing short of the comprehensiveness of the term "Philosophy," as it was then used, could satisfy these ambitious students. And thus they chose as their motto: Φιλοσοφία Βίου Κυβερνήτης, Philosophy the Guide of Life; and the initials "S. P." on the badge stood for Societas Philosophiae. They discussed all manner of questions, and as ardent patriots they could not eschew political matters. But, considering the times, their philosophical detachment is remarkable. They debated, among other questions: "The advantages of an established church," "The justice of African Slavery," "Whether Agriculture or Merchandise was most advantageous to a State," "The cause and origin of Society," "Whether a wise State hath any Interest nearer at Heart than the Education of the Youth," "Whether an Agrarian Law is Consistent with the Principles of a wise Republic," "Whether Commonwealths or Monarchies are most subject to Seditions and Commotions," "Whether Religion is necessary in Government," "Whether in a Civil War any person is Justifiable in Remaining Neuter," "Whether Avarice or Luxury is more Beneficial to a Republic." It appears that John Marshall was at once appointed on the Society's debating team and that he found time in the midst of his law studies to argue the question "Whether any form of Government is more favorable to public virtue than a Commonwealth."

The feature of the Society which was most distinctive was its missionary spirit. Not content with the wide range of local activities, it was declared to be "repugnant to the liberal principles of Societies that they should be confined to any particular place, Men or Description of Men," and that "the same should be extended to the wise & virtuous of every degree and of whatever country." The first efforts at expansion were within Virginia, but the missionary zeal of Elisha Parmele, a graduate of Harvard (who was elected a member of Phi Beta Kappa while he was tutoring in Virginia, in 1779) caused the fraternity to be extended, with the formal authorization of the parent society, to Yale and Harvard. The charter for the Alpha of Connecticut was the first to be made effective, at Yale in 1780, with Simeon Baldwin and James Kent among the members elected from the class of 1781; and this was followed in the next year by the formation of the Alpha of Massachusetts at Harvard. As the Society at William and Mary had ceased to be active, these two Alphas authorized the organization of the Alpha of New Hampshire at Dartmouth in 1787, and the three New England branches provided for the establishment of the Alpha of New York at Union College in 1817. The Alpha of Maine, at Bowdoin, was formed in 1825, and the next branch to be organized was the Alpha of Rhode Island at Brown University in July, 1830.

An effort had been made to establish a branch at Rhode Island College, as Brown was then known, in 1789, but the application was rejected. The circumstances of this repulse may now be recalled without irritation and with no little amusement. Abel Flint, tutor at Rhode Island College, who had been graduated at Yale in the class of 1785, presented the application to the Alpha of Connecticut, which voted to grant it provided the other Alphas concurred. The petition was then forwarded to Harvard, which refused it, and in this decision the branch at Yale concurred. What action was taken by Dartmouth, the third Alpha, does not appear. The reason given by the young gentlemen at Harvard was that the standards at Rhode Island College were too low. They said that the college had admitted "as Sophimores persons who would not rank as Freshmen at Cambridge." They felt it necessary to safeguard the "dignity of the society at large" and not "betray the fraternal interest." They "would gladly take every measure to encourage the young gentlemen at Providence college, and at all the literary institutions, in the pursuit of everything great, good and excellent, provided we should not retard, rather than accelerate the progress of knowledge and virtue." Having thus frowned upon a proposal which they thought might imperil the prestige of the fraternity, the members of the Harvard branch, as their record puts it, "repaired to the house of entertainment," where they partook of a "rich collation, circulating the social glass free from the sediment of care." "Having spent a couple of hours in convivial enjoyment —drank several toasts expressive of our warm affection for the society at large, and our best wishes for its interests—and having smoaked the calumet of peace and philanthropy, we took an affectionate parting."

The historian of our Chapter, Professor Wilfred H. Munro, makes the following comment: "It is not improbable that the inherited antipathy to the colony founded by Roger Williams and his associates, all of whom were men despised and rejected of Massachusetts, may have largely influenced this action of the Harvard Chapter. No objection had been made to the granting of a charter to Dartmouth, whose standards were certainly no higher than were those of Rhode Island College. The Rhode Island faculty of that time was small in numbers, but large in influence. Two of its members, Manning and Howell, had been members of the Continental Congress; the other three professors were unquestionably the peers of the teachers in the other institutions of learning in the young nation. In 1790 the four tutors already specified as members of the 'turning down committee,' three professors of Theology, Hebrew and Mathematics, and a French instructor, 'made up the whole teaching force of the College proper' at Harvard." Professor Munro points out that "among the students in Rhode Island College in 1789 were James Fenner, afterwards to be many times Governor of Rhode Island; Jeremiah B. Howell, United States Senator, 1811–1817; Thomas Park, specified in the Historical Catalogue as Professor of Learned Languages in South Carolina College; Asa Messer, third President of Brown University; William Hunter, United States Senator, 1812–1821, Minister to Brazil, 1841–1845; Jonathan Russell, Member of Congress, Commissioner to negotiate the Treaty of Ghent, 1814, Minister to Norway and Sweden, 1814–1818; Nathaniel Hazard, Member of Congress; Thomas L. Halsey, United States Consul at Buenos Aires; and many others who rose to positions of influence in both church and state." While the decision of the young men of Harvard in relation to Rhode Island College appears to have been without sound support in the reasons adduced, as decisions of even higher tribunals have been thought to be, I am glad to acquit the judges of any consciousness of impropriety and must approve their zeal while regretting its misapplication. They erred on the side of an extreme caution lest they should do anything to impair the standards of the fraternity which they felt to be safe at Harvard and Yale, as it was hoped they would be at Dartmouth, but Rhode Island was a region of independence and uncertainty.

But if Rhode Island was not to have its branch of Phi Beta Kappa, it was still not to be denied the fraternal association of learned men devoted to similar objects. In November, 1797, there was established at Providence the Society of "Federal Adelphi" with even broader aims than those of Phi Beta Kappa. It was composed of holders of college degrees, members of the learned professions, and seniors and juniors in Rhode Island College. Thus it included, we are told, not only the faculty of the college but "all the prominent men of culture in Rhode Island." David Howell, the first tutor in the college, and first professor after Manning, distinguished jurist and statesman, was the first president of the society. There were three public disputations each year held in the middle division of the lower floor of University Hall, then the college chapel. On its anniversary in September there was a public meeting followed by a banquet. The activities, not to say festivities, of Commencement, says the chronicler, caused "many an aching head" to "long for its pillow," but the alumni were ready for another round of "literary excess" on the next day. "At ten o'clock," according to the description of "Old Citizen" in the Providence Journal,[1] "the Federal Adelphi met at College to elect their officers, and then to go in procession to some meeting house and hear an oration from some old graduate. This society was supposed to consist of the most talented, as well as the most wealthy children of Alma Mater. Associated under their half English name, decorated with blue ribbons, and no silver medals,[1] professing mysterious rites of initiation and unutterable advantages to the initiated, and always meeting the day after commencement and having a good dinner, if not a good oration, and good wine in plenty, the society was a very popular one."

The Federal Adelphi had been maintained with notable success for over thirty years when the effort to form a Phi Beta Kappa society at Brown University was renewed. This was early in President Francis Wayland's administration. Wayland was a graduate of Union College in the class of 1813, under President Eliphalet Nott, who had a special interest in Rhode Island College, where he had received the degree of A.M. in 1795 in circumstances giving it an unusual distinction.[2] It was upon the application of Wayland, who had been elected one of the alumni members of the New York Alpha, that the Alpha of Rhode Island was established. It is suggested by Professor Munro that among the influential members of the Federal Adelphi, which had become a great power in the University and State, were professors who had antagonized Wayland's predecessor, President Messer, and that, finding the same antagonism directed against himself, Wayland seized upon his own society of Phi Beta Kappa "as one of the weapons with which to vanquish his opponents." Apart from this possible motive, it was natural that Wayland, the prophet of the new era in education, should desire to link the best stu-

1 Apparently "silver medals" is a slighting reference to the Phi Beta Kappa keys; but all known specimens of the Brown key are of gold. Was it through the influence of the Adelphi that the Brown Chapter has always used blue ribbon rather than the blue and pink of the Massachusetts Alpha? dents of Brown to those of the other colleges where Phi Beta Kappa was established, in a fellowship already of high distinction and apparently destined to enjoy an expanding influence. Wayland was young, only thirty-one, when he became president of Brown, but he was a man of exceptional vision and power, justly described as "one of the greatest college Presidents of his century." With his zeal for educational reforms, it is not surprising that he met with a bitter antagonism which did not confine itself to attacks upon his policies. "Some carped at his Oxonian Cap, others insisted that his side pockets were not the proper place for his hands when engaged in the public services, and that his morsel of narcotic, that mark which distinguishes man from all other animals, should not have been ruminated at such a time."[1] He set himself to establish an educational discipline more strict and comprehensive, and he desired that all the officers of the college should be actual residents within its walls. And it may be noted that one of the most eminent of the non-resident professors who were dismissed from the service of the University in pursuance of this policy was Tristam Burges, the most famous orator in Rhode Island, who had given instruction in oratory and was a most highly esteemed member of the Federal Adelphi.[2]

President Wayland's formal request for the establishment of a branch of Phi Beta Kappa at Brown University was sent to the Alphas of Massachusetts, Connecticut, and New Hampshire on June 25, 1829. While signed by Wayland, it states that it was made in behalf of the faculty of the University, and that it was accompanied by a petition signed in behalf of its graduates. Brown University then held an unassailable position. It counted among its alumni not only the most eminent citizens of Rhode Island but those who had rendered distinguished public service in other States, and the application was received with favor, notably by Edward Everett, president of the Harvard Chapter, and Mr. Justice Story. It is interesting to note the comments in the letter from Daniel Appleton White, also of Harvard, of July 24, 1829: "I shall most cordially give whatever influence I may have in aid of your application . . . . I have not been able to recollect any one at Dartmouth College, to whom I could write on the subject, with a prospect of aiding your application there, but the Hon. R. Choate of this town, an alumnus of that college of high standing, assures me that he will write to some of his friends there, who he has not a doubt will most cheerfully support your request. And Judge Story says he will mention the subject to Mr. Webster and Professor Ticknor, who he thinks will be happy to write to their Dartmouth friends to the same effect. All this, however, I trust will be unnecessary, as there can be but one opinion upon the claims of your university, and I am sure the brethren here have but one feeling as to extending their fraternity to you." There was also support by Judge James Gould of Yale, of the class of 1791, distinguished for his relation to the celebrated Litchfield law school, the first institution of its kind in America. On August 27, 1829, the Alpha at Harvard voted to grant the charter, and with its authority Edward Everett constituted President Wayland, President Nott of Union College, Mr. Potter, and Mr. Thomas Wayland a committee to establish the branch. The Alphas at Dartmouth and Yale gave their consent. The Alpha at Bowdoin, which apparently had not been consulted, did not formally concur until 1841. It appears that there is no charter in our archives unless the letter of Edward Everett, of September 1, 1829, can be considered one. The record book of the Rhode Island Alpha states that on July 21, 1830, two of the commissioners appointed by the President of the Alpha of Massachusetts, the Rev. Francis Wayland and John (not Thomas) Wayland, met and elected the Rev. T. T. Waterman as a joint commissioner for the establishment of the branch, and that these commissioners proceeded at once to elect as members[1] Professors William G. Goddard, Romeo Elton, and Alexis Caswell, and Mr. George Burgess, who was a tutor in the University. On July 31, 1830, the Society elected its officers: President Wayland as president, Professor Goddard as vice-president, Mr. J. Wayland as corresponding secretary, and Professor Alexis Caswell as treasurer.

In accordance with the precedent established at William and Mary, the Alphas had elected a number of alumni and honorary members. Thus the official statement of the fraternity sets forth that the Alpha of Connecticut, down to the time of the formation of the Alpha of New York in 1817, had admitted fifteen graduates to alumni membership and five others to honorary membership. At Harvard during that period, twelve graduates and five honorary members had been chosen, and, at Dartmouth, thirty-one graduates and twenty honorary members. Within four years of its organization, the Union Chapter admitted twenty-six to honorary membership and one hundred and eleven as alumni members. And when the Alpha of Maine was organized at Bowdoin, in 1825, seventy-eight alumni members were elected and four honorary members. The Alpha of 1 They were designated the Foundation Members.

Rhode Island followed this practice. On August 14, 1830, it elected seventy-eight alumni members and two seniors, and, shortly after, ninety-two more were chosen, including four seniors; on August 24, the membership list was completed "to the present junior class," from which three members were elected. Of the one hundred and sixty-six alumni thus chosen, of whom twenty-one never qualified,[1] the records show that fifty-five were lawyers, many of whom were serving or had served in state legislatures and twelve in the Congress; one was a United States Senator; thirteen were judges; two had diplomatic positions; thirty-nine were ministers of the gospel, and two were missionaries; thirty were engaged in educational work; and thirteen were physicians or medical students. Among them we find the names of James Fenner, James Tallmadge, Marcus Morton, and William L. Marcy; Ezekiel Whitman, Theron Metcalf, and William R. Staples; Joseph K. Angell and Samuel Ames; Edwards A. Park and Mark Anthony DeWolf Howe; Adoniram Judson and Cyrus Kingsbury; Henry Wheaton, Horace Mann, and Barnas Sears. Commerce was but poorly represented, as only seven merchants and bankers were on the list, including Moses Brown Ives and Robert Hale Ives. Nicholas Brown was elected in the following year.

Copies of the laws of the Alphas of Massachusetts and Connecticut were sent to the founders of the Alpha of Rhode Island, and its first laws were copied in large part from those of the branch at Harvard. The form of initiation, however, with a few changes and some additions, was taken from the Yale laws. There were added to the oath the important words, "and that in the election of members, you will have exclusive regard to moral character and literary merit." This clause was later modified by the use of the words "paramount" instead of "exclusive" and "scholarly attainment" in place of "literary merit." The "solemn promise" of the oath, thus adopted, included the pledge to "obey the laws" of the Society and to "preserve inviolate the secrets of the same."

When the branch at Brown was formed, a violent crusade against secret societies, which followed the "Morgan mystery," was under way, and Phi Beta Kappa was not spared. There had been earlier movements in this direction. Elisha Parmele, at William and Mary, in 1779, had unsuccessfully proposed that the branch in Massachusetts "be conducted in a less mysterious manner." Josiah Quincy tells us that a committee of the Overseers of Harvard, of which John Hancock was chairman, reported in 1789, evidently referring to Phi Beta Kappa, "that there is an institution in the University, with the nature of which the Government is not acquainted, which tends to make a discrimination among the students," and submitted to the Board the "propriety of inquiring into its nature and design." Nothing seems to have come of this except considerable debate. In later years the opposition to secrecy found support within the Fraternity itself, and as early as 1826, all injunctions to safeguard secrets, save as to the symbols on the medal, were voluntarily abandoned by the Society at Dartmouth. Edward Everett, Justice Story, and John Quincy Adams became leaders in the movement. In the early part of 1831, Avery Allyn[1] published in Boston his book, Ritual of Free Masonry, to which was added a "Key to the Phi Beta Kappa," revealing what he called its "infidel motto." Said he: "Yes, reader, Philosophy is the rule or guide of life! I had been taught from a child, and still believe, that the Bible is the rule or guide of life. But here a vain, imported and infidel philosophy is exalted into the place of divine revelation, and that holy book, which contains the words of eternal life, is superseded, and set aside. . . . Philosophy, philosophy, has been the watchword of infidels in every age." There could be no answer to such an inspired attack and Phi Beta Kappa, with its secrets disclosed, stood naked before the world. In the summer of 1831, the constitution of the Alpha of Massachusetts was revised, so as to remove all injunction to secrecy. It is said that the Alpha of Connecticut hesitated, but Edward Everett's plea soon prevailed. Chancellor Kent, recounting in his journal the incidents of his visit to Yale in September, 1831, on the fiftieth anniversary of the graduation of his class, when he delivered the Phi Beta Kappa oration, says: "At 11 a.m. I attended the meeting of the Ph. B. K. in the 3d story of the old chapel. . . . There I saw Ed. Everett and a crowd of the civilians and clergy and Professors. The question was on abolishing the secrets of the Society. Professor Silliman, Doctor Ives, Revd. Mr. Robbins, the Revd. Mr. Bacon of the 1st Presbyterian Congregation & Judge Daggett spoke. The rule of secrecy was abolished with acclamation."

1 "Not in any Phi Beta Kappa list. Possibly a pseudonym." O. M. V.

Following these precedents, the Alpha of Rhode Island, on September 6, 1832, repealed the requirement of secrecy, save that there was to be no revelation of any votes or discussions with respect to the qualifications of candidates for election to the Society.

It is pleasant to observe how worthily the Brown Chapter has maintained the happy tradition of the Fraternity with respect to the quality of its membership. The practice with respect to the election of undergraduates, who became the so-called "immediate members," was not definitely established for several years, but there is evidence of care to insure proper selections. Immediate members were not to be chosen before the second (later it was made the third) term of the junior year. The original laws, following the Yale laws, provided that not more than one-third of the members of a class might be admitted, and Professor Munro states that, until 1893, one-third of each graduating class was elected to membership. He says that in the early days no ranking list of scholarship was kept in the colleges, and that the "immediate members" were left to their own judgment in the selection of candidates. But for many years, he adds, the list of candidates has been determined by the records shown upon the college books, the relative rank of the men being known only to the secretary of the chapter, who ex officio is the presiding officer of the undergraduate members. This list is submitted to the latter, and the names, which are presented in alphabetical order, are considered separately. By this method it is said that partisanship is entirely eliminated. It thus appears that the honor of Phi Beta Kappa, so far as the scholarly attainment of candidates is concerned, has been entrusted to the official masters of the mathematics of the marking system, subject to the correction of most obvious errors, in the prediction of subsequent careers upon this basis, by elections to alumni membership.[1]

Difficulties arose when, under President Wayland's leadership, provision was made in 1850 for obtaining the degrees of A.B. and Ph.B. in three years, and A.M. in four years, but the "relative position" of the degrees of A.B. and A.M. having been restored before 1858, it was deemed "inexpedient to alter the time-honored laws and usages of the institution," which the Society's committee described as "established with reference to attainments in a strictly Classical Course, and which should not, in the opinion of your committee, be diverted from its original object." The question of the admission of candidates for the Ph.B. degree arose definitely in 1879, and after much consideration it was decided, four years later, that such candidates should be considered eligible. The number of students increased so rapidly under President Andrews, who took office in 1889, that a by-law was adopted in 1893, on the initiative of the undergraduates, limiting the election of juniors to one-eighth of the class, and the total elections to one-fourth instead of one-third, and fixing twenty-five as the maximum number that might be elected before graduation. It is agreeable to observe the solicitude of the undergraduate members with respect to the standards of election. Indeed, it appears that they have been far more solicitous than the eminent alumni whose careers, absorbing their attention, have given luster to the Fraternity. In 1903, the undergraduates proposed the requirement of an "absolute standard of attainment" and a "definite amount of work in the humanities," with the result that, in 1904, one-fifth was made the maximum and one-sixth the minimum number that might be elected from any class, only candidates for the A.B. and Ph.B. degrees to be counted for this purpose. It was provided that the candidates must not be deficient in any of their work and must have taken at least one-third of it in the "humanities," which were defined as courses in language, literature, philosophy, history, fine arts, political and social science, and political economy. At the instance of the immediate members, the subject received further consideration in subsequent years. The by-laws of 1914 made one-eighth the minimum and one-sixth the maximum number of the members of a class, counting the candidates for the degrees of A.B. and Ph.B., to be elected. In 1921, again, the undergraduate members recommended a minimum standard of attainment, and in 1924 the Society adopted the requirement of an average grade of B in the "humanities," to which the courses in education were added. It appears that in 1922 the rule prescribing a minimum of one-eighth from each class had been dropped and the requirement as to the "humanities" had been raised to three-fifths of a student's work; in 1924, this was reduced to two-fifths. Recently the discussion of the question of eligibility and methods of election has been renewed, and the matter has been referred to a special committee whose report is now awaited.[1]

Provision was made for the Women's College in Brown University in 1891, and in the following June the Board of Fellows recognized women as candidates for all degrees. The question was thus raised with respect to these deserving sisters in relation to the Rhode Island Alpha of Phi Beta Kappa. It does not appear that the founders of the Fraternity contemplated the admission of women as members, but their liberal principle that the advantages of the Society "should be extended to the wise and virtuous of every degree and of whatever country" seemed to afford a basis for their inclusion whenever desired. When the question was raised at Brown, women had already been made eligible for election to the chapters in three coeducational institutions, the Alpha of Vermont (University of Vermont), the Gamma of Connecticut (Wesleyan University), and the Theta of New York (Cornell University). But there was a distinct question in the case of separate colleges for women which were established in connection with men's colleges. The Alpha of Rhode Island pointed the way to the solution of this problem. A committee appointed at the annual meeting in 1898, consisting of E. Benjamin Andrews, William Goddard, and Arnold Green, reported that "as Brown University now admits women to the usual academic degrees, we see no reason why they should be excluded from membership in the Phi Beta Kappa Society, provided high scholarship continues to be the condition of admission." The object of this resolution was attained by the adoption, at the annual meeting in 1900, of a report of a subsequent committee consisting of John H. Appleton, Nathaniel F. Davis, and Louis F. Snow, by which a special section of the Rhode Island Alpha was created for the Women's College. The women elected and initiated to constitute this section and their successors were authorized "to carry on hereafter elections of new members from future Junior and Senior classes of the Women's College," in accordance with the rules now in force or hereafter enacted by the Alpha, the expressed intention being that the women elected "shall be only such as have manifested a scholarship not inferior to that of the lowest men scholars elected," and that the "number of women elected from a given class shall bear no larger proportion to the whole number of pupils in that class than prevails in case of men pupils."[1] The result has been that the business of the undergraduate women's section has been conducted separately but in a manner similar to that of the men's. Women are entitled to participate in the annual meeting of the Society at large, and graduate women members are elected at this meeting in the same way as graduate men.

Soon after this solution of the problem had been found

1 This last provision was not incorporated in the revised Laws of 1905, 1914, and 1927. It appears never to have been in effect.

at Brown, the same method was followed by the Delta of New York at Columbia University in relation to the section at Barnard College, and four other chapters have been organized along the same lines. The Brown Chapter, after considering the situation in coeducational institutions, adopted in 1915 a resolution suggesting to the Senate of the United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa, and to the Committee of the National Council on Fraternity Policy, the advisability of having the chapters of coeducational institutions "organized into two sections, one for men, the other for women, each electing a proper ratio of the whole number to be elected, proportional to the number of each sex registered as candidates for literary degrees." In the communication by which this resolution was forwarded, in 1916, it was pointed out that in the year 1914, 26 chapters in men's colleges elected 544 members; 6 chapters in women's colleges elected 177 members; and 51 chapters in coeducational colleges elected 1,373 members, of whom 603 were men and 770 women; and that in several of the coeducational colleges very few men were elected. In view of the tendency thus disclosed, the Alpha of Rhode Island requested the Committee of the United Chapters on Fraternity Policy to consider whether or not new chapters thereafter organized in coeducational institutions should not be formed with two undergraduate sections as above stated. It is understood that this request was referred to a committee of the National Council at its meeting in 1917 and received approval. I am advised that it has not thus far affected the policy of coeducational institutions in the election of women members.

The Rhode Island Alpha started, as we have seen, with an imposing group of alumni members. In the succeeding years, the additions of this sort were less numerous.

THE HISTORY OF THE CHAPTER

I am informed that down to the end of the year 1835 there were added thirty-eight alumni members and three honorary members. In the seventy years from 1836 to 1905, inclusive, two hundred and forty-nine alumni and thirty honorary members were chosen. While in many instances there is lacking evidence of the distinction warranting the election, the list includes those who have reflected high honor upon the Chapter, as, for example, among others, George William Curtis, David Webster Hoyt, and William E. Foster; Presidents Ezekiel G. Robinson and Clarence A. Barbour; and Professors John L. Lincoln, John W. P. Jenks, John H. Appleton, Wilfred H. Munro, William W. Bailey, Hermon C. Bumpus, George G. Wilson, and A. Clinton Crowell. During the last twenty-five years it is gratifying to note that there has been exceptional care in the election of alumni and honorary members, only forty-nine alumni and three honorary members having been chosen during this period. By the laws of 1905, alumni were made ineligible until five years after graduation. The separate committee on nominations, then created, is now required to limit its recommendations for alumni members to graduates of fifteen years' standing, except in unusual cases; to give preference to members of reunion classes; and to consider whether a candidate stood in the upper fourth of his class as an undergraduate and whether he has given clear proof since graduation of distinguished scholarly or literary capacities. A clear distinction has been made between alumni and honorary members, the latter being those holding no degree from Brown. It is significant that these restrictions were applied in a period when the number of graduates had greatly increased. I understand that the principles of election thus established at Brown have won the approval of the officers of the United

Chapters and have been recommended for adoption by all the chapters.

The maintenance of high standards of membership which have made election to Phi Beta Kappa a coveted honor—the brevet of the collegiate world—has come to be regarded as the chief end of the organization, rather than continuous literary and social activities. I have noted the literary exercises of the founders at William and Mary, and, when the Rhode Island Alpha was organized, the chapter at Yale had definite requirements for frequent debates and declamations at meetings at which attendance was compulsory under penalty of a fine, graduates as well as undergraduates, residing in New Haven, being subject to the rules. The Brown Chapter did not adopt these provisions and was apparently content with dignified exercises "on the day of the anniversary meeting" similar to those at the other branches. At Brown, as at Harvard, the annual meeting was held at Commencement time and there was no other stated meeting of the Society. An orator and a poet graced the public exercises, and in keeping with the custom which distinguished the Commencement period, the members of Phi Beta Kappa marched in procession with their medals and ribbons. I am told that the old account book of the Rhode Island Alpha shows that there were charges for the ringing of the church bell; that from 1835 to 1846 the bills for "music, attendance of officers, etc.," amounted to $275; that the largest expenditure during the history of the Chapter was the sum of $1,719 for brass bands, from the years 1852 to 1909, while for the same period the orators and poets cost the Alpha only $353.25. At the outset, the suggestion of rivalry with the old established Federal Adelphi could hardly be avoided, but this was short-lived, as after the year 1835 the meetings of the Federal Adelphi did not appear among the arrangements for Commencement time. For many years, in view of the holding of the "alumni festival" of the University in odd years, Phi Beta Kappa had its literary exercises biennially in the even years. Although the eminence of the orators and poets had given a noteworthy distinction to these meetings at Brown, it was decided, in 1912, to discontinue them, but there were still a Phi Beta Kappa oration and a poem on the day before Commencement in 1915. Meanwhile, in the nineties, midwinter banquets began to be held, and since 1909 there have been banquets at some convenient time in each year when the Chapter has had the benefit of important addresses, and in this way the tradition of literary exercises has been maintained.

From time to time efforts have been made to stimulate activities of a social character in the undergraduate chapter. In the early years there was nothing of this sort, even the initiations, except on rare occasions, being a matter of a brief routine. From 1891 the initiations were more impressive and were made the occasion of an agreeable social intercourse, and since 1909 the men's initiations have been held immediately before the annual banquet. From 1914, recognition services have been held at chapel after the elections, and it has thus been sought to give appropriate emphasis to intellectual achievement. In recent years this service has been united with a similar one for Sigma Xi. Sporadic plans have been made for undergraduate meetings of a literary as well as a social character, and since 1922 there have been a number of such gatherings in which members of the Faculty have shown a special interest not only by being present but by giving informal talks.

In the women's section, the initiation of members has always had pleasant social incidents, and in 1914 a social organization was formed, including not only women graduates and undergraduates of the Rhode Island Alpha but also women members of other chapters. This association, affording opportunities for interesting meetings, has proved to be of great value.[1]

During the first hundred years of the existence of the Fraternity, although twenty-four branches or chapters had been established, no council or convention of the Fraternity had been held. The celebration by the Alpha of Massachusetts of its one-hundredth anniversary, in 1881, was the occasion for a movement to effect a "more perfect union." The Harvard Chapter, in inviting delegates to attend the centennial celebration, asked that they be authorized to take part in a convention "to determine on any changes which may be necessary in the constitution of the fraternity." Professor Lincoln and Professor Appleton were two of five delegates from the Brown Chapter. A committee, of which Professor Appleton was a member, was appointed to consider desirable measures. A constitution for the National Council of the United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa was recommended and became effective by a sufficient number of ratifications in 1883, the first meeting of the National Council being held in September of that year. Ratification of a constitution is a difficult matter in Rhode Island, and, with inherited reluctance, the Rhode Island Alpha postponed the ratification of the constitution of Phi Beta Kappa.[2] Its assent was not given until 1895. Since then it has taken its part, and it is believed a useful one, in the proceedings of the United Chapters, although it is still rather independent. It keeps its own key, made by its own jeweler, and has been opposed to what it regarded as a too rapid expansion of the Society. In 1927, the Rhode Island Alpha ratified the proposal for the North Atlantic Conference of the Society, and, in 1928, it declared its dissatisfaction with the policy of the Senate in dealing with applications for new charters. But its attitude, while critical, cannot be considered as obstructive; on the contrary, like all candid and intelligent criticism, its suggestions have been helpful. I should add that the Rhode Island Alpha joined in the movement for the Phi Beta Kappa endowment fund, with the result that the Brown Chapter made a most enviable record, greatly exceeding its quota.

Even a brief and necessarily inadequate account of the activities of the Chapter cannot fail to mention the care with which its records have been kept and its archives preserved. It has published from time to time notable addresses and poems, and convenient catalogues of its members. Most important has been the work of the secretary, who maintains the essential contact with the Faculty, with the other chapters, and with the national organization. Especially during the past twenty-five years the success of the Chapter, both in its useful activities and in the maintenance of its discriminating conservatism, has been attributable to his wise leadership. . . .

The unique position of Phi Beta Kappa, and its usefulness, can be safeguarded only by unremitting attention to what has become the law of its being. It is not a club, or a social organization, although in the several chapters there may be to some extent the welcome incidents of good fellowship. The prestige of the Fraternity is due to the fact that it is an association of men and women of scholarly attainments who have proved their merit according to the accepted standards of college discipline. Reserved for a relatively small number who are selected, by reason of their rank as students, late in their college course or at the end of it, admission to the Fraternity has been, and is now, perhaps more than ever, highly prized as a mark of intellectual distinction. The best proof of the utility of the Fraternity is the esteem in which the election is held. It cannot be doubted that the opportunity to obtain it is a stimulus to scholastic effort, and the election comes as a gratifying reward for a continuous and successful devotion to study which is without the spectacular accompaniments of the field or stadium, and which otherwise, in most instances, would lack adequate recognition. Whatever may be said of the value of various activities proposed for the organization, as such, and no one would decry any intelligent effort on its part in the interest of education, the essential thing, in my judgment, is to hold to the theory of the Fraternity as a fellowship of scholars, admission to which is an honor conferred by reason of demonstrated worth. The success of Phi Beta Kappa continues to lie in what it is, rather than in what it does.

The distinction of the Fraternity is thus a trust committed to all the chapters, requiring the vigilance of each, as well as the constant and intelligent coöperation of the national organization. Especially important is this care at a time when curricula are being modified and extended, new educational methods are being devised, criteria of collegiate attainments are themselves being closely scrutinized and evaluated, and old classifications are being superseded. However difficult it may be satisfactorily to establish the conditions of eligibility to membership, the substance of the old requirements in demanding attainments considerably above the average must be retained, so that the key of Phi Beta Kappa may continue to be a badge of special honor.

In order to achieve this end, it is necessary that undergraduate members should be solicitous to conserve the standing of their chapter, and this interest may be stimulated without making impracticable demands. Nothing is more regrettable, as it seems to me, in the college life of today, than the dissipation of energy in multiplying activities pressing inordinately upon the more talented students who show capacity for leadership in many college enterprises which have an irresistible appeal but stand in the way of opportunities for the concentration and reflection necessary to intellectual discipline. The last part of the college course, which should be the most fruitful in mental effort, is most prolific in distractions, and it would be unfortunate if Phi Beta Kappa in its endeavor to promote interest in scholarship should merely add to the burdens of those who are most earnestly devoted to its aims. It would seem that a few well-conducted meetings would be sufficient to maintain the necessary interest of the undergraduate members, who should always be able, as I am sure they are at Brown, to count upon the wise leadership of the representatives of the Fraternity upon the Faculty. Similarly, the concern of graduates for the prestige of their chapter may helpfully be shown by occasional meetings of distinction, without futile demands for a continuous activity on their part not in keeping with the Fraternity tradition.

The particular interest of Phi Beta Kappa is in liberal education. Whatever debate there may be as to its exact definition, or its prerequisites, it persists as an ideal. Intensive critical study of educational aims and methods has found nothing to take its place. In a general sense, it may be taken to mean the coming into the inheritance of accumulated intellectual riches and the acquiring of wisdom in their use. It embraces the acquisition of a considerable amount of information with regard to the world in which we live, the order of nature and man's progress in discovering and utilizing natural forces; with respect to the history of peoples, the development of nations and governments, political experiences, and social habits and tendencies. It includes the long and fascinating process of becoming familiar with the treasures of literature and art. It means the development by careful training of the capacity to appreciate what has been done and thought, the ability to make worth-while appraisals of achievements, doctrines, theories, proposals. It is liberal because it emancipates; it signifies freedom from the tyranny of ignorance, and, from what is worse, the dominion of folly. Learning is not its aim so much as intelligence served by learning. The acquisitions it demands are broader than those of a mere professional or technical training, because they look to a mastery independent of any particular vocation and to creating the resources of leisure as well as of work.

It is a never-ending pursuit. But it must have a beginning, stimulus, and direction. The purpose of the college, at least, is to furnish these. We may at times overestimate what can be accomplished in the few years of college training, and there are not wanting those who in their zeal to dignify and extend college work forget that college is made for man, and not man for the college, and that the college man is merely getting his start. In these days we are taught that education, under a proper conception of it, becomes life itself and no longer a mere preparation for life; that we learn by doing.

Much that is sought to be taught the college man can be useful only as it it is subsequently related to experience. Perhaps the most that can be expected of college men is to learn the way, if not the truth. College gives the opportunity, and this is essential, to become acquainted with authentic sources of information, to gain familiarity with the storehouses of knowledge, to ascertain the means of access to their wealth. The atmosphere of the institution, and of associations of students within it, is all important. An atmosphere of indifference, or of intolerance or cynicism, stifles aspiration. It is necessary to encourage the expression of individuality, but how far this expression becomes helpful depends upon the individual. The expression of one bred to superciliousness is not agreeable. It is true in this relation, as in others, as one of our wisest and most liberal judges said the other day with respect to certain current phrases as to judicial work, "Much may result, if the new wine goes to light heads, as at times it has." A reasonable degree of self-knowledge, as well as knowledge of others, a becoming self-restraint, an attitude of decent respect for the opinions of others, as well as for one's own, are requisite to the cultivation of the discriminating judgment and to the attainment of the mastery which mark a liberal education.

At all stages of this pursuit, and especially at the beginning, the indispensable conditions of attainment are wide reading, close attention to the views of leaders of thought, competent discussion, communion with well-furnished and well-trained minds, and abundant reflection. How are these conditions to be satisfied in the modern college, where so many not only have little love for study but promote enticing diversions which make study by others difficult? At this time, when the college stands in need of every influence which favors intellectual discipline and achievement, as against a complacent indifference, the service of Phi Beta Kappa is of heightened value. It holds aloft the old banner of scholarship, and to the students who have turned aside from the easier paths and by their talent and fidelity have proved themselves to be worthy, it gives the fitting recognition of a special distinction. If it cannot be said that careers always fulfill the early promise, even by this test, in the main, Phi Beta Kappa has been justified of her children.

The Rhode Island Alpha completes her one hundred years with the gratifying assurance that she has been faithful to her high calling and that the standards of Phi Beta Kappa have not suffered at her hands.

LISTS OF MEMBERS[1]

Explanation of Method of Listing

Members of the Chapter elected honoris causa who have no degrees from Brown University are listed as Honorary Members, and the year of election is indicated in parentheses.

The basis for Associate Membership will be found explained in Article VI, Section 2; of the Constitution.

Members of the Chapter holding a bachelor's degree or the doctor's degree in course from Brown are ordinarily listed under the year the degree was granted. The designation (Jr.) is attached to those elected as Juniors, and (Gr.) to those elected upon completion of the work for the Ph.D. If a date follows the special designation, e.g., (Jr., '45), (Gr., '46), or—in this case only— (Sr., '47), this indicates an irregular time of election, usually because of the interruption of studies by war.

Alumni elected honoris causa have the year of election, with no further designation, in parentheses after their names.

An alumnus holding only an honorary degree from Brown is listed in italics under the year when the degree was given, with the date of his election to membership in the Chapter in parentheses.

The women members of the Chapter are listed separately.

A dagger (†) preceding a member's name indicates that he is dead; a star (*) that he was not finally graduated from Brown University; a circle (°) that his name has been recovered for this edition by a study of the early records.
